

IF WE LIVED FOREVER

If we lived forever, we would not have to invent
God, or Spirit or Saints or Good and Evil.

Matter of fact, all traditions of spirituality and
Religious doctrines would not exist without
Mankind's fear of death.

Matter of another fact, mankind does live forever,
Has no beginning, has no end, and is only conscious
A little while in the middle, and again in the middle,
And again in the middle.

So, there you have it.
The whole function of spirituality and religion is
To convince us that we're not our bodies
And that we don't die when our bodies do.

Consider that the whole purpose of life in a body
Is to expand the consciousness to understand that
The end of the body is not the end of living.

Consider that the whole purpose of life in a body
Is to grow toward presently unimaginable degrees of Compassion, peace, and joy, while living in a body.

Consider that the laborious struggles Humanity suffers
To discover the meaning of life
Is totally unnecessary because,
Life itself is the meaning of life.

That really simplifies things doesn't it?

Now, Baby Love, how do we go about dispelling the
Spooky "woo-woo," "airy fairy," wishes, lies, and dreams
Of all Humanity, and cut to the chase of Truth?

It may be time to stop diddling around trying to make
Our falsehoods sound real enough for Increasingly Illumined sheep to follow.

It may be time to wake up from our dreamtime hell,
Smell the roses, do-the-do, and finish playing in the sand box.

What do you think?
