

THERE'S GOT TO BE

There's got to be a better way to say
 "I don't care," because it's not accurate.

Spiritually speaking, what's a positive way
 To say, "I'm neutral"?

Where is a language, a phrase, a metaphor,
 Or a colloquialism that expresses
 A state of neutrality?

Are humans so addicted to experiencing passionate swings
 That they have no concept of emotional Equilibrium?
 Of Balance? Objectivity? Impartiality? Un-attachment?

How about you, Baby Love?
 Can you get comfortable,
 Sit in the middle,
 And watch the movie of your Life?

You *can, when you understand that:

Arguing to make your point is a waste time and effort.
 The adversary will never say, "You're right."
 (Human nature must evolve. You first.)

Most confrontations are simply negative entertainment.
 They are seldom necessary for survival.
 (Know what NOT to do. Be vigilant.)

Competition works when the loser is proud of the greater skill of the winner,
 And the winner is grateful for the loser's challenging ability.
 (A sense of Oneness is required. Love more than yourself.)

Are you recognizing your own one-sided proclivities?
 Or . . . not so much?

Might be wise to take a look inside.
 Use discernment.
 The heart cares, equally.

Brain Bothers

Middle Way Discovery

THERE'S GOT TO BE